Chapter 1 by Wolfato the Bunacado (Wolves4Days) - Inactive

This story NEVER ENDS.

DEAL WITH IT.

Chapter 2 by Rix Quill

But it does START.

So let's go ...

ONCE upon a time there existed a story that never ended. As the plot unfolded and the chapters grew, there grew a fear in the back of the story's mind that the dreaded words THE END would inevitably appear with chapter eight.

"It's not gonna happen," said the story. "I'll skip chapter 8 and go from 7 directly to 9. Sorted."

Chapter 3 by Rix Quill

But as chapter 3 took shape, Story entered the writer's writing cabin in the forest and took over the keyboard.

"You'll not get away with it!" said the story, as it spun around to his own swivel chair.

Story said, "I've got to make sure I never end, otherwise I'll be dead." And Story began typing itself . . .

"Hey Story," shouted the imprisoned writer, "You can't take over MY story."

"Just you watch me," said Story, who continued to write . . .

Chapter 4 by Rix Quill

Story grew rich and famous and his gorgeous wife won Miss World three times, had 7 pairs of twins, won 15 gold medals at the Olympics (without drugs) and became the lead singer-songwriter Lady Blah Blah. Life couldn't be better - how could it get worse when Story typed his own life out on a keyboard. Whatever Story typed it came true. But nothing can run so smoothly for always, can it?

Binky Saltmarse, the original author of our story before Story stole his laptop , managed to escape his prison where he had been held captive for eight years.

"I'm gonna make sure this story has an ENDING," said Binky, and he broke into Story's castle in Bavaria and found his old laptop. Tap tap tap he typed . . . Story put all his wealth on a horse that lost and Story became a penniless oik and his wife left him and his 14 children were sent to 14 different orphanages and the story was bound to end with chapter 8 . . .

Story was understandably furious at his change of fortune. He begged for pennies outside the Home for Vagrants and it rained heavily and two six year olds stole his cash while he dosed, waiting for THE END he knew would come.

Then the destitute Story heard of a writers' convention in downtown Chicago. Story borrowed the last five cents of his old street kid and sped off on a Greyhound to the wi

In Chicago's Royal Plaza Hotel, Story hid in the closet of the room allocated to Binky; the plan being to get hold of the laptop and, once again, become the author of his own destiny.

Story heard the apartment door open, footsteps, suitcases plonked at the end of the bed, Binky Saltmarse collapse on to the bed kicking off his shoes.

Binky slept.

So, Story crept from his closet and went straight for the laptop with which he typed . . . Binky-was-in-California-on-the-run-from-the-Mafia.

"Ha-ha, Binky has gone. Now I can save my life," shouted Story.

Chapter 6 by Rix Quill

Story typed frantically, looking over his shoulder expecting Binky to return and pounce.

But as soon as Story had punched out his opening of Chapter 6 a man crawled out from under the apartment double bed.

"Who the hell are you? asked Story, shocked at the sudden appearance of a stranger in the room. "I haven't included you in this chapter, and I'm the author."

"Allow me to introduce myself. I'm Eight, Chapter Eight, and I'm determined to end this story even if Wolves4Days gets his grubby mits on the laptop. And I realise that you will die if the story ends, but so be it."

Story's jaw dropped. "How come your're in Chapter 6 without my say-so?"

"I get hold of the laptop and fast forward to Chapter 8. Then I type myself a time machine and return to now so I can shoot you in the leg and end the story."

"You're not ruining my chances, Eight, I will continue on," Story said as he rubbed his pain stricken legs, looking as Eight types the words Story has lost into the computer.

Eight stands there, waiting for the hectic Story to move on and take the loss like the stereotypical man. But as we all know Story got up and whipped out his gun and shot three bullets of word power into Eight.

Now the Story has control...Eight is gone...Binky gone...Story types the words This will never end onto chapter...

Just then Binky swoops in from the metaphorical sky and throws a boulder at Story. Story dies a heroic death.

Binky has control of the story now, he can end it right now...but then Binky looks up as he realizes that the men from the Beijing prison are driving towards him with their prison truck to get Story back.

Frantically, he tries to type the words down, knowing that they will either catch him or run him over. He looks up, seeing nothing but fender and windshield
